Principal's Message

Dear Readers,

"To get the full value of joy, you must have someone to divide it with" - Mark Twain.

To have a lasting relationship with people around, we have to be good with everyone. Once we make relationships really meaningful with the family members and relatives, our home becomes a heaven to live.

When we apply the same philosophy with friends, we get 'faithful' friends around whom we can bank at anytime. Similarly, being excellent with teammates, we can attract, retain and associate with amazingly talented professionals.

Those who are excellent with people whom they meet, always get the opportunity to meet and mingle with outstanding people in their life. Once we get into this habit, it generates a rippling effect and whenever the need arises there will be plenty of people to help us, wow us, encourage us, be kind to us and surprisingly loyal to us. This helps us to enlarge our circle and our stature as leaders peaks to new heights.

INTERNATIONAL DAY FOR THE ELIMINATION OF VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

This day aims to prevent and eliminate violence against women and girls around the world, calling for global action to increase awareness, promote advocacy and create opportunities for discussion on challenges and solutions.

International day of elimination of violence against women

Violence against women is a form of discrimination and violation of human rights. It causes untold misery, cutting short lives and leaving countless women living in pain and fear in every country in the world. It harms families across the generations, impoverishes communities, and reinforces other forms of violence throughout societies. Violence against women stops them from fulfilling their potential, restricts economic growth, and undermines development. The scope and extent of violence against women are a reflection of the degree and persistence of discrimination that women continue to face. It can only be eliminated, therefore, by addressing discrimination, promoting women's equality and empowerment, and ensuring that women's human rights are fulfilled.

Violence against women is neither unchanging nor inevitable and could be radically reduced, and eventually eliminated, with the necessary political will and resources. This study identifies ways to close the gap between States' obligation under international norms, standards, and policies and their inadequate and inconsistent implementation at the national level. It calls for efforts to eradicate violence against women to become a higher priority at the local, national and international levels.

Causes and risk factors

The roots of violence against women lie in historically unequal power relations between men and women and pervasive discrimination against women in both the public and private spheres. Patriarchal disparities of power, discriminatory cultural norms, and economic inequalities serve to deny women's human rights and perpetuate violence. Violence against women is one of the key means through which male control over women's agency and sexuality are maintained. Violence against women is not confined to a specific culture, region or country, or to particular groups of women within a society. The different manifestations of such violence and women's personal experiences are, however, shaped by factors such as ethnicity, class, age, sexual orientation, disability, nationality, and religion.

Forms and consequences

There are many different forms of violence against women-

Physical, Sexual, Psychological, Economic.

The most common form of violence experienced by women globally is intimate partner violence, sometimes leading to death. Also widespread are harmful traditional practices, including early and forced marriage and female genital mutilation/cutting. Within the community setting, femicide (gender-based murder of women), sexual violence, sexual harassment, and trafficking in women are receiving increasing attention. Violence perpetrated by the State, through its agents, through omission, or through public policy, spans physical, sexual, and psychological violence. It can constitute torture. The high incidence of violence against women in armed conflict, particularly sexual violence including rape, has become progressively clearer.

Violence against women has far-reaching consequences for women, their children, and society as a whole. Women who experience violence suffer a range of health problems, and their ability to earn a living and to participate in public life is diminished. Their children are significantly more at risk of health problems, poor school performance, and behavioural disturbances. Violence against women impoverishes women, their families, communities, and nations. It lowers economic production, drains resources from public services and employers, and reduces human capital formation. While even the most comprehensive surveys to date underestimate the costs, they all show that the failure to address violence against women has serious economic consequences.

Promising practices

Many States have developed good or promising practices to prevent or respond to violence against women. State strategies to address violence should promote women's agency and be based on women's experiences and involvement, and on partnerships with non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and other civil society actors. Women's NGOs in many countries have engaged in innovative projects and programs, sometimes in collaboration with the State. Common principles include clear policies and laws; strong enforcement mechanisms; motivated and well-trained personnel; the involvement of multiple sectors; and close collaboration with local women's groups, civil society organizations, academics, and professionals.

International Day for the Elimination of Violence Against Women

The United Nations General Assembly proclaimed 25 November as International Day for Elimination of Violence Against Women. This date was selected to honour the three Mirabal sisters, political activists from the Dominican Republic, who were assassinated.

The 16 days of Activism against Gender Based violence runs annually from November 25 to December 10 (International Human Rights Day).

This year 2021, the theme of the 16 days is "Orange the world: End violence against women Now!", drawing attention to the urgency of action.

According to a WHO research for 2021, 1 in 3 women and girls experience violence in their lifetime. Also emerging data shows an increase in calls to domestic violence helplines in many countries since the outbreak of COVID-19.

Several public events will be organised during this 16 days Activism. Iconic buildings and landmarks will be given orange colour to recall the need for a violence-free future.

Observing this day symbolizes the mobilization against violence against women. We must put our heads and hearts together and work harder to make women's health and gender equality a reality for all.
