Principal's Desk

"Impacts from the past provide learning rubrics for living today."

Learning from the past means that when you start something new, it's important for you to understand and refer to previous experiences.

Your present thinking can be framed with past experiences. You'll be conscious of past successes and failures in your own ventures, your company's, and those of historical figures in society.

This trait tends to help you thrive in functions like business improvement, consulting, auditing, and problem-solving. If you research past decisions to uncover why they were made, and seek explanations of behaviors that could inform your own.

It's a cautious, inquisitive outlook that often correlates with long-term success and profitability in business.

Learning from the past shapes the future for the better: "Never doubt that a small group of thoughtful, committed citizens can change the world."

In sum, learning from the past is truly valuable to mankind. It shows our evolution patterns and the evolutions of things around us that could impact us. In addition, it helps avoid mistakes. While learning from the past is of great interest, taking the right actions accordingly is more than valuable.
